The U.S. Army needs recruits, and they're trying to find them on Twitch, a livestreaming platform for gamers. With a new e-sports team, the Army hopes to attract young, tech-savvy recruits. But they haven't found a fully receptive audience. And this isn't the first time the military has slid into our gaming consoles. VICE News Correspondent Dexter Thomas Jr. digs into military gaming history to explain why the Army is looking for new soldiers through online video games.
